Situational Judgement Test Question Preview

You are a trainee analyst enrolled in a graduate program at a London bank. You are currently working under the supervision of two managers. The first manager has asked you to give a presentation to a client in a meeting later this week; the second manager is waiting for a detailed report for a new and important client. You are on a very tight time schedule as both assignments are due to be handed in by the end of this week. You work extra hard and are confident you are going to meet your deadlines when a third manager approaches you. She notifies you of a client's complaint that you will have to deal with urgently. Given this unexpected task you will struggle to complete the two other assignments you were working on.

What would you do in this situation?
Rank TWO of the following options, one as the BEST and one as the WORST.

Question	Best	Worst
Response #1: Spend some time examining all three tasks. Use your own common sense and previous knowledge to decide which of them would be the least problematic to postpone.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Response #2: Speak to the clients, apologise to them, saying that a very urgent issue has come up and you will have to reschedule your deadlines.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Response #3: Gather information from all three managers to assess priorities and deadlines. Then, open your work calendar to find ways of revising your timetable, and be aware of the possibility that you will have to put in a few more hours, if required, in order to meet all your deadlines.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
Response #4: Work overtime in order to get the presentation and the report done on time. The extra time will give you the opportunity to complete both assignments to a high standard and deal with the complaint as well.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>

From there, they mark the performances. If this is the case, the problem-solving case study is likely to come up as one of the first exercises you do after retaking the psychometric aptitude assessments needed to confirm the score. Case studies are simulation exercises that put a candidate in situations he might actually see while he is at work. Without these key skills, case exercises can prove challenging for individuals. Evaluators then assess the candidate's ability to analyse information with a logical approach to decision-making and his or her ability to cope with difficult situations. However, you can prepare yourself with some practice of case studies and by reviewing examples of evaluation case studies similar to those that will be provided in the evaluation center. If you don't need to introduce yourself for a group exercise, consider naming yourself as someone who can answer the questions. Determine which information should be retained and which should be discarded as soon as possible. The evaluators will examine both the decision reached and the rationale for the recommendations. For a group exercise, determine the roles that individuals are associated with in the scenario and how they can interact with the user or influence the analysis and decision-making process. How you work with others and the reasoning behind your response is. Case studies are a central part of the exercises that make up most assessment centres. Case studies typically provide information including financial reports, market studies, competition analysis and other information which may relate to any aspect of the profession. It is more concerned with the approach to resolving the issue than with its solution. The information gathered by the assessment team is valuable to companies working through the screening and hiring process with the most likely applicants to achieve good results in the opening phase of work.
